The College-and Career-Readiness Standards are designed to be robust and relevant to the real world, reflecting the knowledge and skills that our young people need for success in college and careers.

The College-and Career-Readiness Standards... Changing the Way We Approach Assessment

Promoting critical thinking, problem solving, and 21st century skills, the College-and Career-Readiness Standards are aligned to college and work expectations. Assessments that measure these standards are dramatically different than traditional multiple-choice tests. In the College-and Career-Readiness Standards era, assessments must give students the opportunity to demonstrate understanding through writing, producing work, and explaining how they arrived at an answer.

College-and Career-Readiness Standards-aligned items can ask students to perform a series of tasks that measures multiple standards—ending the era of test items that map only to a single standard. Gone are the days when a multiple choice item was sufficient for measuring a student’s level of mastery on a specific standard. The depth, rigor, and complexity of the College-and Career-Readiness Standards move beyond the measurement ability of a multiple-choice test alone.
